Salinardi, Hayes to Be Released From Jail Saturday; Terms Shorten

John Salinardi, 30, and Edward Hayes, 24, serving out a fine of $100 each imposed by Judge Edwin C. Dickenson in the superior court more than two months ago, will be released Saturday from New Haven jail by order of the court issued today. At that time they will have served 60 days for the fine they could not pay which the court imposed when they were convicted of assault and breach of the peace in a tavern brawl in the North End last summer.

The Waterbury men will owe $40 balance on their fine which they must pay to the probation officer into whose custody they will be released. But the court costs were remitted by Judge Dickenson and, besides the balance of the fine, they only will have to pay the costs of the probation officer.

Salinardi and Hayes were arrested on complaint of two men who said that they were victims of attack in a North End tavern. They were bound over to superior court from the city court where Attorney John F. Tobin represented them, the case resulting in fines.

FRENCH PLOT IS BEING EXPOSED

the Surete Nationale (secret police) included the plans of hundreds of Parisian cellars, the headquarters of the General Labor Confederation Vice Premier Leon Blum's apartment and other important buildings.

Other papers included blank order forms signed by the general commanding the colonial forces in Paris and the seals of several departments of the military government of the capital.

Of five persons arrested for having connections with the scheme one was identified as Lieutenant Raymond Cheron of the 54th Aviation Regiment.

It was revealed that the government had been greatly concerned about the aviation forces which reportedly included many members who were rightists or members of the outlawed Fascist organization, Croix de Feu (cross of fire), which made special efforts to enroll aviators.

Documents Reveal Plot

The plot, details of which were given out by Marx Dormoy, minister of interior, was uncovered with the finding of certain documents in the headquarters of Laisne Hypothecaires Maritimes et Fluviales, a Seine river steamship company. The manager of the concern, Etienne Deloncle, was reported to have fled to Italy.

Dormoy said that an investigation of the Cagoulards revealed a complete semi-military organization which planned to overthrow the republic and restore the monarchy under a dictatorship.

Plans were found for attacks on government ministries and the wholesale importation of arms from foreign countries.

"It was a veritable plot against Republican institutions," he said. "Investigators of the Surete Nationale and prefecture of police seized large amounts of military material from abroad, including rifles, machine guns, grenades, revolvers and cartridges.

"We are faced by an organization copied on principles of an army,"

Plans Carefully Prepared

Dormoy declared that the plan had been prepared carefully. Searches revealed papers containing the names of commanding officers in several districts and important documents stolen from military posts.

"These preparations were broken up," he said, "thanks to the vigilance of the government which has the confidence of the country. Republican institutions have nothing to fear from such factious enterprises."

Additional raids on suspected arms caches were being made throughout the country from the German to the Spanish frontier.

One of the raids involved the castle-like chateau of Countess Cotey, the late millionaire perfume manufacturer, at Louveciennes. A maze of underground passages, secret rooms and mechanical trap doors were said to have been found. Authorities said that the chateau had been made almost impregnable from the most severe bombardment.

Count Henry Denies It

Denying any connection of the house of Bourbon-Orleans with the Cagoulards, Count Henry of Paris, 29-year-old heir of the pretender to the French throne—John III, Duke of Guise—flew back to Bel-

"Protest" Shatters Quiet of Southbury in Old Church

Top—First Selectman J. Edward Coer, inset, holds meeting to zoning theme in spite of attempts of several at South Britain Congregational church to inject attack on Bund camp. Lower—Crowd moving into church built in 1761 for promised "fireworks" indicated by pastor, Rev. M. E. N. Lindsay, inset, who criticized establishment of settlement planned by "Nazi" group at Kettletown in Sunday sermon and renewed attack yesterday at the meeting held after the official zoning assembly called by selectmen was adjourned. Merchants closed shops and farmers took a holiday to attend the zoning meeting, some remaining to hear adherents of Mr. Lindsay and New York summer residents of Southbury adopt resolution asking President and Congress to "dispel Nazi menace."

"took over" the protest meeting from Rev. M. E. N. Lindsay, pastor of South Britain Congregational church, at its outset.

But to trace back. The town meeting on zoning was convened at 2 o'clock yesterday at tiny South Britain town hall by Selectman Coer. The hall was inadequate, as partisans of the protest had predicted earlier and, immediately, Rev. Mr. Lindsay offered the Congregational church nearby for the meeting. Town officials agreed.

Twenty minutes later the ancient, tall-towered white church, whose slightly musty interior has withstood oratory of religious might since 1761, became the scene of the strangest embroglio of discourse ever countenanced in similar confines within Connecticut. Sun glistened through to paint and faded pulpit brilliant yellow-brown. A dozen camera flash bulbs exploded every few minutes throughout the two meetings.

A baby whined in its mother's arms outside the balcony entrance. Farmhands came from the fields and storekeepers closed shop to dribble in as the meeting drew residents of South Britain from the streets.

Here and there an alien to Southbury was marked by metropolitan dress in the audience which crowded the pews of the small church. Farmers who had neglected to shave over the years became "characters" for the cameras of photographers from all parts of the state. Camera-men dashed out onto the rostrum to "snap" the few speakers who dared their flashlights and the laughter of the gathering over a "missed shot."

Opposes Zoning

Immediately, the first "bombshell" was exploded. Gregory Cassidy, Democratic town chairman, introduced a motion "that Southbury be not zoned." This, after the Rev. Mr. Lindsay had returned from stoking the church fires and had been named chairman of the zoning meeting.

Discussion lengthened into the channels of the zoning after Mr. Lindsay had warned the gathering that "no mention of that other matter" would be allowed at the current meeting. Thus, the guns of "Nazi camp protest" were spiked by agreement reportedly made beforehand, an agreement which precluded official sanction by the town of Southbury of criticism of the Bund camp at Kettletown.

Motion Passed

Eventually, after Mr. Coer had explained the matter of the zoning as merely a preliminary to regulation of building in Southbury, the establishment of a commission which would draw up by-laws on which the town would vote, a motion to establish such a commission was offered, seconded, passed, by vote of 122-41. Residents of Southbury, holders of property to value of $300, voted.

So, the proponents of zoning, led by Mr. Coer, vanquished opposition and obliterated the aspect of "protest" from their regularly-devised town meeting, held unusually in the Congregational church. Thereafter, the following were chosen as members of the zoning commission: Albert Aston, one year; Leslie Wheeler, two years; Henry McCarthy, three years; Herbert Wells, four years, and R. C. Mitchell, five years.

Leave Meeting

Immediately the meeting changed aspect. The selectmen and many more left the church, disregarding the invitation of Mr. Lindsay to remain for a "public meeting." Again cameramen rushed to vantage spots to "shoot" the now-accustomed members of the "protest" group and

NEW ENGLAND BUS LINE AFFECTED

Cleveland, Nov. 24—(UP)—A strike at midnight tonight of drivers on eight Greyhound Bus Company Lines operating east of the Mississippi river and north of Norfolk, Va., was called today. More than 1,300 drivers would be affected. The strike call was issued after S. R. Harvey, assistant president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, announced collapse of negotiations on demands for wage increases and closed shop. The walkout originally was called for Oct. 10, but was postponed pending further negotiations.

Harvey said the union had demanded a mileage rate for drivers of 5.5 cents with a minimum guarantee of 200 miles a day. The present rate is 3.61 cents a mile with no minimum guarantee. Ivan Bowen, counsel for the company, said buses would operate despite the strike call. Company officials said wages in the lower brackets had been increased and that average pay of the drivers was between $190 and $288 a month.

Companies affected were: Ohio Greyhound Co., Pennsylvania Greyhound, Capitol Greyhound, Canadian Greyhound, Illinois Greyhound, Central Greyhound, Eastern Greyhound and New England Greyhound.

Reading a prepared address Mr. Holmes offered opinion that "history may be in the making in this little church today and it rests with us as to whether that history shall have honored place in the annals of our country or be remembered as only an empty gesture." Thereafter, he attacked the "Nazi creed" as "un-Godly, un-American, despotic. . . (saying) . . . it has no place in America and by the grace of God we will not permit it to be flaunted and propagated in our land." Then he submitted his resolution, which, called for intervention by the president and Congress to "destroy this menace to our constituted government," citing the purchase of land by the Bund and assailing a "concentration camp for Nazi American youths."

No Uniforms

Miss Jennie Hinman, of Southbury and New York, offered a resolution to the effect that "display of any emblem or flag not accompanied by the American flag . . . in the town-ship . . . or wearing of . . . any uniform indicating allegiance to any foreign power . . . be prohibited and forbidden . . ."

Thereafter, Miss Hinman led in singing "The Star-Spangled Banner," while cameramen exploded their flashlights in the air and members of the gathering, according to the Waterbury Republican: Dramatically, and with profound sincerity, all stood and, using the church hymnal or relying on their memory, sang the first verse of "The Star-Spangled Banner," while photographers cameras clicked and flash bulbs flashed from the pulpit.

Offers Prayer

Mr. Lindsay offered prayer for guidance "as we see these things that are un-Christian . . . do what we can in a Christian way to abolish them. May we do so in the spirit of the loving Christ, because we desire to save all mankind rather than condemn it and are not against men but against movements that hurt men."

First Selectman Coer told The Democrat today that the town of Southbury contemplates no official action currently against the establishment of "Camp General Von Steuben," the Bund project at Kettletown. Whether the zoning commission will restrict the operations planned at the camp, said to include only youth activities and none of the adult drilling described to the camps elsewhere, he was not empowered to say, he added.

"The matter has been stirred up by the press," Mr. Coer declared. "It is his opinion that Southbury can cope with whatever situation may arise from 'Nazi' activities at the Bund camp when, and if, such matters become cause for public concern," he explained.

Lured from Cafe

Police believed Gaeta had been lured from his cafe by a decoy telephone call. As he stepped through the entrance, he was met by a man, believed his former racket boss.

The player conversed briefly. Then the second man suddenly whipped out a gun and, backing away from Gaeta, fired five shots. Four struck Gaeta, one piercing the heart.

The player ran to a waiting automobile in which two companions were waiting and sped away.

Gaeta was dead before passersby could reach his side.

Had Police Record

Though possessing a long police record, Gaeta was known for his charitable enterprises. A former senior vice-commander of the Revere American Legion post, he was organizing a civic campaign to raise money and clothing for Revere's needy children when slain.

Gaeta, married but childless, served on a mine-sweeper in the U. S. navy during the World War. In his cafe venture, he was in partnership with William O'Brien, who six months ago was held up and robbed of $1500 in Banco receipts. He was an acquaintance of Nate Siegel, also a Revere cafe proprietor, who was slain in 1934 in a racketeering feud.

leaders as State Controller Charles C. Swartz and Mayor Thomas J. Spellacy of Hartford.

Earlier in the fall it had practically been determined that selection of a secretary would be left to the discretion of the State Chairman, but with the candidacy of Mr. Clarie announced, it is evident that various leaders are not disposed in this direction.

Fight Is Promised

Promise of a good fight at the Waterbury meeting next Monday is assured by the calibre of the candidates and the division of leaders supporting them.

William Farley of New Britain, prominent realtor there and also former State Director of FWA activities, seems to be the general choice of leaders and State Central Committee members for the office of treasurer.

He will, if elected, fill the office held for the past eighteen years so capably and efficiently by Fred P. Holt of Hartford. Prior to assuming this responsibility Mr. Holt had acted in a similar capacity for many years in the Democratic town committee of Hartford. Due to his health his activities have been limited in the past few years and his grandson, Guy Holt has assumed the responsibilities of treasurer. Since the latter's recent appointment as state treasurer by Governor Wilbur L. Cross he has expressed a desire to be relieved of the extra burden.

Holt, Greene Resignations

Mr. Holt's resignation was submitted at the recent meeting of the state central committee in New Haven, but action was deferred at the time.

Mr. Greene's resignation as secretary was submitted when the state merit system went into effect. As an employee of the state motor vehicle department and subject to civil service requirements he was obliged to drop all political activities. He has served as secretary since 1934. Two years prior to that he had served as office manager of state headquarters during the 1932 campaign.

Diagonally across the street, Jack Davish, another gambler, was slain. A short distance up the same street was the home of Mrs. Esther Gorgs, whose riddled body was found recently stuffed in a barrel in New York.

said, "and told her to go on upstairs and rest."

Married Two Months

Mrs. Phillips married only two months ago to Chester Phillips, former intercollegiate gymnastic champion and also an Olympic athlete, was arrested because she failed to report the alleged confession to police. Detectives and Mayor S. Davis Wilson, who assumed personal jurisdiction over the case by sitting as a committing magistrate, were sympathetic toward Mrs. Phillips when she was brought into court and finally released her in $500 bail. She was allowed to sign her own bail bond.

Mrs. Phillips and Miss O'Connor embraced and kissed when the former was brought in for questioning. Relating how Miss O'Connor came to her house on Sept. 7th with a newspaper in a telling of Nancy's death, Mrs. Phillips continued:

"She told me she was responsible for the death of Nancy Glenn. I told her I did not believe her. I told her to go upstairs and rest. She said she went for a ride on her bicycle and was riding down that dirt lane when Nancy Glenn must have followed her and she fell in the mud from her bike. She had dropped some money in the mud and she asked Nancy to help her pick it up. After she had one that she told her to go home, but the Glenn girl kept on following her and insisting and insisting she be given a ride.

"She told me she hit her and the girl screamed, cried and cried and screamed, and she hit her again to quiet her. She put the body in the road (in a mud puddle which was covered with a piece of tin oil drum) and then got on her bike and rode to the home — (the name was omitted by agreement between Mayor Wilson and detectives) and there washed the mud off of her shorts and legs. She told me she burned her gloves. On the way home she met Mrs. Glenn who asked her if she had seen Nancy and, of course, she said no."

"Did she tell you why she hit the body under the tin?" Mrs. Phillips was asked.

"Yes, because there was a man working in a field nearby and she was afraid he would see the body."

"Why didn't you tell the police department about this?"

"Because of loyalty to my friends and besides it wouldn't bring back Nancy."

The alleged confession related by Mrs. Phillips was said by police to have been the second one the O'Connor girl made. They said she confessed the crime at Merchantville, N. J., when she first was arrested, but later declined to sign the written confession.

Miss O'Connor's lawyer insisted that she removed to Moyamensing prison, where she will be in custody of the sheriff, so that police would not have a chance to "persuade" her to sign the confession.

Miss O'Connor is the daughter of Robert S. O'Connor, a high school instructor.
